

As we learn throughout our class, art can be a powerful tool for activism and social change. In my latest work for this project, I have created a flag that shows an image of a closet being opened with the message "Out of The Closet" written around it. This flag is a call to action, urging individuals who identify as LGBTQ+ to embrace their authentic selves and be open about their identities. Through this flag, I engage with art activism promoting LGBTQ+ visibility and acceptance.

The closet has long been a metaphor for the experience of hiding one's true identity, particularly in the LGBTQ+ community. For many individuals, coming out can be a difficult and complex process involving fear, uncertainty, and potential rejection from loved ones and society. Through my flag, I am seeking to challenge the stigma and fear associated with coming out and encourage individuals to embrace their true selves.

Flags have a unique power as a tool for activism. They are highly visible and can be displayed publicly, allowing messages to reach a wider audience. Unlike shirts, pins, and posters, flags have a significant and dramatic presence that can command attention and provoke conversation. They are versatile and can be hung in various settings, such as rallies, marches, and community events.

In addition, flags have a long history of being used as a symbol of resistance and solidarity. They have been used by oppressed and marginalized communities throughout history, from the suffragettes to the civil rights movement to the LGBTQ+ rights movement. By creating a flag that encourages individuals to come out of the closet, I am tapping into this tradition of using flags as a tool for social change and activism. This falls under the Group Value that we learn.

Where the flag acts as a tool to let people share one common purpose to recognize I also use the Bi color in the flag; despite the experience of "coming out" is not unique to the Bi community, I want this flag to target the Bi community specifically to tie in with my other project so far.

In conclusion, my flag is a powerful tool for activism and social change, urging individuals to embrace their authentic selves and come out of the closet. Through powerful imagery and a clear message, I hope to challenge the stigma and fear associated with coming out and promote LGBTQ+ visibility and acceptance. As an artist, my work can positively impact the world, and I will continue to use my art as a tool for activism and social change. By working towards a more just and equitable society, we can create a better future for all individuals, regardless of their identity.
