

Duc Nguyen

Professor Brett Taylor

Queer Graphic

Taking this class has been an incredible experience for me. Through the course material, the presentations, and my interactions with my peers, I have deepened my understanding of queerness, art, and their intersection. I feel that I have gained valuable technical skills and research skills that will serve me well in my art-making journey, and that I have also grown as an individual in terms of my confidence in my queer identity.

Through taking this class, I have found that my concepts of queerness have not necessarily changed, but have been strengthened. However, what has changed is my confidence in my queer identity. I have learned that identities are not limited to the labels that society or the LGBTQ+ community has created, but are unique to each individual. The beauty of queerness lies in its undefinable nature, which allows for constant evolution and growth of our understanding.

Art has proven to be a powerful means of communication for the queer community. It has allowed us to express ourselves and advocate for our cause in a way that words sometimes cannot. I have been impressed by the range of art forms and techniques that we have explored in this class, from screen printing to sewing to illustration. Through my own experimentation with these methods, I have developed a greater appreciation for the skill and dedication required to create meaningful art.

Working alongside my peers in this class has been a great privilege. I have learned so much from their diverse backgrounds, perspectives, and experiences. Through their presentations, I have been introduced to a wide range of queer artists, each with their own unique style and approach. I have found that the more I learn about other artists and their work, the more inspired I become to create my own art.

In addition to technical skills, this class has also taught me valuable research skills. I have learned how to find and evaluate sources, how to synthesize information, and how to present my findings in a clear and engaging way. These skills will be invaluable to me not only in my art-making journey but in all areas of my life.

Finally, I have been deeply moved by the works of the artists we have studied in this class. Each artist has contributed something unique to my understanding of queerness and art. Felix D'eon's unapologetic portrayal of nudity and sexuality has taught me to be more confident and unapologetic in my own art. Alice Oseman's storytelling through illustration has shown me the power of visual narratives to convey complex ideas and emotions. And Brett Taylor's exploration of the relationship between queerness and society has encouraged me to think more deeply about the ways in which our identities intersect with the world around us.

In conclusion, this class has been a transformative experience for me. It has deepened my understanding of queerness, art, and their intersection, and has equipped me with valuable skills and knowledge that will serve me well in my future endeavors. I am grateful for the opportunity to have taken this class, and I look forward to continuing to learn and grow as an artist and a member of the queer community.